

How Communication Works

Three things need to happen in order for communication to be successful:

1. a sender sends information to the receiver
2. the receiver receives the information
3. the receiver interprets the information and creates the same meaning intended by the sender

What can go wrong?

1. Something stops the information from traveling from the sender to the receiver (ex. the teacher intercepts a note or a falling tree knocks down some telephone lines.)